Kessler Batteries Watch Battery Recycling Program

Kessler Batteries will buy spent silver oxide watch batteries, paying market silver per ounce x 1.5 for each pound received, excluding other batteries and packaging. i.e.: If spot silver is trading for $20 an ounce, we will pay $30 a pound for each pound of silver oxide batteries received, or we will pay 1.7 x spot for returns greater than 25 lbs.

We offer proper, safe and traceable recycling. We pay nothing for lithium, alkaline, zinc-air or other non-silver oxide batteries—they represent a cost for recycling that ranges from $0.75 / pound to more than $6.00 per pound depending upon the battery chemistry—plus transport and handling costs. Our offer is based upon receiving a normal mix of batteries (approximately 90% silver oxide). If the concentration of silver oxide batteries is less than 90% of any shipment we receive, an adjustment may be made in the settlement, or a charge issued.

The minimum shipment of batteries accepted for payment is 3 pounds. Spent cells must be pre-sorted to isolate the lithium batteries from everything else. According to DOT regulations, lithium batteries must first be individually bagged or covered with tape. Transport only via surface carriers. Spent lithium batteries shipped to us jumbled will be assessed a labor fee to sort and cover the lithium terminals; the shipper would remain liable for any damages or fines occurring as a result of this negligence. Expired batteries should be returned in the manufacturer's original packaging.

Our attractive recycling container holds about 3 pounds of spent silver oxide batteries and features a slotted lid that allows a 357-size battery to pass through, while restricting most lithium cells. This recycling container is available free upon request, from participating Sony watch battery distributors, with any watch battery order.

WATCH BATTERIES

TRUSTED

Sony batteries are trusted for use as original equipment in 1 out of every 2 watches sold.
Sony is also the leading brand in the watch battery replacement market, with a 40% market share.

Sony / muRata, THE TRUE GLOBAL LEADER!

Sony's manufacturing facility, technology and team of battery engineers (including the inventor of the mercury free silver oxide battery) was acquired by muRata in 2017. Toward the end of Q1 2020, we will begin selling the same batteries under the muRata brand, in exactly the same packaging.
